lew York, May 23.—New Yorkers are rning to make their home surroundings no less than their garments conform to th nes of the changing seasons. We ummer upholteries and house-furgs, and while, perhaps, the comexion of one's entire house is not altered the approach of the heated season certain of the rooms are transmogrified and those parts of the house most used for living purposes are somewhat refurnished. Some householders take up the carpets throughout the house from garret to basement. Then China mattings are hid down. The Celestials have learned of late years to make these cool floor coverings in an immense variety of patterns. Going through a stock of mattings in a large house here I found almost as much variety of design as was displayed among the more civilized productions of our own looms.

The walls are covered with bright, gay hintses, which make one cool and cheeral, merely to look at. LACES AND COVERINGS

In laces the lighter qualities of Brussels coint, Irish point, and cherry are to be For furniture coverings the same goods should be used that are employed to hang the walls. Striped velours and chintzes are in extravagant favor for this purpose. The velours come in the prevailing Empire and Louis XV, colorings and designs. They make particularly pretty portieres. Cottonades and French crétonnes are likewise in vogue. VILLAS AND COTTAGES.

All of these are suggestions which are especially applicable to the fitting of summer villas and cottages, and if one is going out of town for the summer and intends hiring a small place of one's own it is well to remember that an immense deal of comfort is to be obtained by making its fursishings and fittings tasteful and appropriate. Luxurious surroundings are not expected in a summer cottage, but one may as well have them restful to the eye, and esthetically effective as well as cool and seasonable.

NATIT AND NOVEL.

The outing dresses this year are more than usually natty and novel. A boating-gown, the model of which is going to attain favor, is in a striped boating sergeblue and white-made with a round, full skirt. The waist of this dress is in a basque form, with the front open from neck to waist, where one side folds over the other, fastening in place with a bow of red ribbon. This wide opening is filled by an absolutely plain close-fitting vest of white fiannel. The collar and revers are of the same. The sleeves are made quite full to permit easy motion in rowing. This is not, of course, the sort of costume our athletic sisters wear—that is, those of them who really intend execution with the oars. NATTY AND NOVEL.

ho really intend execution with the oars. who really intend execution with the olds.
These girls wear jerseys, and—if not too close to a curious and wide-eyed civilization—steeveless jerseys at that. However, the gown is one that looks very fetching in a boat, and as that is about the aim of the amateur lady oarswoman, it will doubtless be a popular style.

Reefers and blazers are useful all-around garments that should play a prominent part in the wardrobe of any grl who is going out of town this summer. Gray cheviot is de rigneur for travelling dresses. June brides will wear such gowns dresses. June brides will wear such gowns on "going away." They are made with habit bodices, plain skirts trimmed however with a single flounce. The flounce—about six inches deep—is almost invariably on the prevailing skirt.

The sweet girl-graduate is thinking harder about her "commencement" gown now than about her examinations. It will be a white crepe de close covered with chiffon. Everything en suite.

Yellow leather laced boots are the latest dictum in foot-gear. They are not pretty, but Paris announces that they are chic and accordingly stylish.

A pretty innovation in wedding gowns—

Save the Relics. And Jacob said, "Sell me this day thy birth-right." And Esau said, "Behold I am at the point to die, and what profit shall this birthright do me?" and he sold his birthright to Jacob. To the Editor of the Dispatch :

It beg that you will allow me space to make a protest against the sale of what may be called "Virginiarelies." In simple words her historical buildings, documents, and the graces of her honored dead. This noxious practice has come among us like some low, fatal fever, and already several landmarks of great historical value have fallen at its dread approach. And worst of all the pathway for this slavish bartering seems onemed in every direction.

Well may Jamestown and Monticello tremble on their foundations, and ere long even celebrated men will have to add this clause to their last wills and testaments: "I furthermore declare that my bones and ombetone shall not be sold at public auction, seither shall they be carried for exhibition to he Werld's Fair at Chicago!"

If poor Virginia relic-owners cannot withstand the ingling dollars of northern "speculators," the State should come to their aid and save the sacred spots, these speculators, the State should come to their aid and save the sacred spots, these speaking mile-stones in our native State.

Many of these places are intimately connected with the very birth of the nation, many are sanctified by holy memories, and many more stand as shining marks in Virginia's noble history, while all are shrines whereat thousands have gathered in the past and where tens of thousands should gather in the future. We should have just as much State pride as personal pride, and in honoring and preserving these State relies we honor ourselves.

If this birthright barter goes on much longer Virginia might well resemble the Vatican at Rome could some mighty hand sweep away all of its beautiful statues and paintings and leave its great halls and walls deserted and bare. The building would remain, but its glory would be gone.

Then, let us stop the sale of these precious mementoes of the past. It is a diagrace to ourselves and a diagrace to the State, and oftentimes very bitter fealings are engendered between our countrymen by it. It is wrong—wrong in every way, and just as surely as we continue in it some day we had a surely as we continue in it some day we dered between our countrymen by it. It is wrong—wrong in every way, and just as surely as we continue in it some day we will certainly have cause to curse our irreparable folly.

I cannot better close this brief, faulty article than by ascribing all honor and praise to the women of Virginia for the noble manner in which they are striving to preserve the household gods of their State. They deserve all encouragement and success, and well may they be proud of this service, for, with the exception of that due their Creator, they will never engage in a nobler one, or one for which they will better deserve the thanks of their fellow-citizens, and the undying gratifude of posterity.

PRILADELPHIA, PA., May 23.—The affairs of City-Treasurer John Bardsley were brought to a crisis by his arrest a few minutes before 11 o'clock to-night at his home, corner Penn and Price streets, Germantown. He is sick in bed and two detectives are guarding the room in which he lies.

The three expert accountants appointed by Mayor Stuart to examine Mr. Bardsley's accounts discovered a discrepancy of $39,000 shortly before noon to-day. They immediately notified Mayor Stuart, who directed that they should make formal affidevit. This they did as follows:

RUGS AND HANGINGS.

Another good idea is to take up the carpets in the sitting, dining, and bed-rooms and replace them with eastern rugs, after having two or three coats of shellac applied to the floor. Then we have summer hangings. The plain and fancy scrims, in many light and pretty colorings, lock appropriate to the season. The Mayor immediately had a conference with City-Solicitor Warwick, District-Attorney Graham, and other city officials, and the result of this conference was the issuance of a warrant for the City Treasurer's arrest. The warrant was placed in the hands of Chief-of-Detectives Wood, and that official, with two of the most trusted members of his staff, started at 10 o'clock to-night for the handsome new residence of Mr. Bardsley in the fashionable part of Germantown. Since his trouble began Mr. Bardsley has been punctual in his attendance to his official duties until this morning, when a note was received A WARRANT ISSUED. this morning, when a note was received from his physician announcing that the City Treasurer was too ill to appear at his office. Their instructions were to take him in custody if he was able to leave the house, but they found that he could not be removed from his bed, so Chief Wood left his two men at the door of the sick man's room. He will be given a hearing before Magistrate Pole at the Central station on Monday at moon, when the story of his shortage in detail will be told. Aggregating the national. Within a month Mr. Bardsley is said to havedrawn $34.000 from the bank and appropriated it to his own use. The experts have been engaged in their work for three days and this is the first discrepancy discovered. Other shortages may be brought to light in further comparison of the accounts with the many banks in which the city funds are deposited. The discovery was made to-day that Mr. Bardsley's personal deposit with the suspended Keystone Bank amounted to $606,000.

TENNIS BLOUSE.

As to tennis costume the blouse gives way to a kind of compromise between a reefer and a coat, sleeved, but loose and open usually, although some of them fasten about three buttons from the collar. This garment is worn over a waistocat of contrasting goods or over a lersey.

As to the skirt that is made plain, but in folds which resemble plaits. Striped flamels and serges are affected, but one wears nothing loud or showy.

The tennis cap is a little cloth contrivance something like the jockey cap. For all other sorts of out-door amuses ments—rowing, mountaineering, or yachting—the flat straw sailor is the thing.
